1. Nonai Sumo airfield is situated on a natural plain south of Tiyan Sumo, a small temple eight kilometers southwest of Nonai Sumo (118-45, 45-33).
 2. The airfield, which is about 1,300 meters east-west by 1,000 meters north-south, has a hard surface of soil mixed with fine pebbles and covered with a dense growth of grass four to six inches high. The airfield has a slight slope which prevents puddles from forming in rainy weather. There is no paved runway.
 3. There are no field facilities.
 4. Swamp land west of the airfield can easily be distinguished from the air because of its difference in color from the grass on the field.
 5. Wild sweet flag, growing densely in the areas surrounding Nonai Sumo, makes it impossible to land planes in these areas as the roots of this flower have formed bumps about eight inches high and about twenty inches in radius. These areas look smooth from the air but can be distinguished because they appear higher than the grassy regions.
 6. All types of planes, with the exception of heavy bombers and large transports, can use the airfield.
